

Cortney Simmons, Ph.D.

Dr. Simmons is a Postdoctoral Associate in the Department of Psychology and Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut. She received her Ph.D. in Psychological Science from the University of California, Irvine. Her research integrates concepts and methods from developmental psychology, criminology, and neurobiology to examine how individual and environmental factors contribute to antisocial psychopathology (e.g., conduct disorder, psychopathic traits) in adolescents. Her current work centers on two areas: (1) identifying cognitive/affective processes associated with antisocial psychopathology, and (2) understanding how the juvenile justice system as a developmental context influences adolescent development and behavior. Dr. Simmons has several publications in top journals, including the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences and Child Development, and her work has received recognition from the American Psychological Association and the Society for Research on Adolescence.
