

Stephanie Carreiro

Dr. Stephanie Carreiro is an emergency medicine physician, medical toxicologist and digital health researcher. She is a 2009 graduate of New York Medical College, and completed her emergency medicine residency in 2013 at Brown University. She completed a medical toxicology fellowship in 2015, and recently received a PhD in Biomedical Sciences both at the University of Massachusetts. She is currently an Associate Professor, Director of the Tox(In)novation Lab, and co-Director of Emergency Medicine Research at University of Massachusetts Chan Medical School. Her current research program focuses on the development of digital diagnostics and digital therapeutics to drug toxicity and substance use disorder. She is the principal investigator multiple industry and federally funded research grants, including a K23 Mentored Career Development Award, two R44 Small Business Innovation and Research Awards from the National Institute on Drug Abuse.